The Christmas Blue-Stocking.

From the receiver's standpoint, everything found in his Christmas stocking may be divided into things wanted and not wanted. Perhaps it is the blue-stocking who, rarest of all, finds "things wanted.

Yet here are plenty.

For instance, a wonderfully handy student's table with railed sides, part of which is furnished with a seat, and opens gate-fashion to let the student in. Once in, he finds a broad table-top be-fore him and underneath both elbows; and a bookshelf encircling him within

Beautiful bookeases, fitted with cup-boards and portfolios for rare books and prints. Writing chairs in a great variety of styles from $3.25, and writing desks from $5.75, whose conveniences will surely show the royal road to composition. Exquisite little hand-painted papeteries in Old Adam's style,

The Holiday Store and a Few Facts and Figures of Interest.

In these days, when not less than twenty stores will advertise the possession of the largest assortment of Christmas Goods this side of the planet Jupiter, a few facts concerning The Big Store may not be out of place. We have a habit of reducing things to figures, so that any one who cares may prove them. The Big Store, firstly, is an absolutely fireproof edifice—so far as we know the only fireproof structure devoted to retailing in New York. In the days of great crowds that's a matter you want to remember. We have seven great floors-within a fraction of fifteen acres of space-now practically converted in its entirety into a holiday bazaar, and if New York holds its equal we don't know it. Take Toys for instance. Two-thirds of the second floor-70,000 square feet-is its present size. Have you ever seen its equal? Jewelry alone occupies 10,000 square feet on the main floor. Where else can you gaze upon such an expanse of glittering gold and diamonds? And so we may continue ad libitum through sixty-eight sections of the store. There's nothing to compare with them, much less equal them, in New York City. But it's not only in size we excel-price and quality are equally superior. Assortments, good taste, reliable workmanship, all received the painstaking attention of the foremost specialist in the various lines. And so we may safely leave "the tooting of the horn" to others, relying solely upon the sound judgment of the purchasing public to select for its trading place the store best suited to supply its wants.
